Mrs. Neame Reported as Prostrated at Her Home.

All the parties to the sensational trial of clubman Frank Ellison for his alleged attempt to kill the sexagenarian of Leila Olyve Neame, are resting today. Mrs. Neame, who was aided by Ellison in securing a divorce, and whose day, Mrs. Neame, who was aided by Eilison in securing a divorce, and whose supposed affection for the big man-abouttown has certainly turned to bitterest hatred, is reported as prostrated at her father's home.

Eilison is chewing the cud of more or less pleasant reflection in his Tombs cell. He regards yesterday's court-room story as decidedly favorable to him. Prosecutor Wellman is busy furbishing up his weapons for a renewal of the onsiaught on Monday, when he hopes to present in rebuttal testimony that will destroy the effect of the evidence for Eilison.

At the beginning of the trial it was supposed by the public that there were supposed by the public that there were only two witnesses to the encounter it-

He told his version of the meeting with Henriques on the evening of June 5. He said he stopped Henriques to ask an explanation of Henriques's conduct in opposing his attentions to Mrs. Neame and the appeal to the police for protection. He said Henriques replied that he did not want to talk with him.

"Then I placed my hand on his shoulder," said Ellison. "I did not strike him. I wanted to stay him. He drew a pistol. I was unarmed. I jumped back and he fired at me. Then I rushed upon him. struck him over the head with my light bamboo cane and struck him in the face with my fist. I tried to get possession of the pistol, but falled, for he got is into his hip pocket, and as I struck him he fell into the gutter. He grabbed my cane and I jabbed him in trying to get it away from him. I may have jabbed him in the eye; I don't know. I was very much excited. The crowd came and took me off. The next most important witnesses in the trial were the three hackmen who. he did not arrest me.

The next most important witnesses in the trial were the three hackmen who, standing at the other end of the block, heard a pistol shot and ran to the scene to find Henriques in the gutter and Ellson kneeling over him belaboring him with his fist and jabbing him with the cane. They pulled him oft and some others led Henriques away.

The venerable Dr. Halleck and his valet, Shepard Berry, were attracted to their door opposite by the report of the pistol. They saw a big man standing over a little man, who lay by the gutter. The crowd came a moment later and shut off their view.

Two other witnesses testified that half an hour later Ellison narrated to one of them—John Allen—the incident in this order:

them—John Allen—the incident in this order:
"I had a row with a man. He insulted me. I struck him. He drew a pistol and fired at me and I gave him a licking."

Mrs. Neame testified that she never loved Ellison and never agreed to marry him. She said she accepted his attentions after her husband had accused her of infidelity, connecting Ellison's name with hers, because Ellison had threatened to testify against her in the divorce suit if she didn't agree to marry him. She said he was violent to her and spat in her face because she at last told him that she would never marry him, and that it was at this stormy meeting that Ellison said:

Miss Panzer was brought up from the Harlem prison and the pair went to the home of Father Kessler, of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, One Hundred and Twenty-lifth street and Ninth avenue, where the marriage ceremony was performed.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Sept. 30.—
Theschooner yacht Ellen, anchored off City Island, and owned and commanded by Alderman Charles F. Bruning, of this city, had a narrow escape from being wrecked last night. The heavy gale about midnight aroused her crew, and they were startled to find that she was dragging her anchor and rapidly drifting on the rocks off Locust Point.

Capt. Bruning, Frank Curtis and the two sallors, who were on board, succeeded in hoisting sail, but a tremendous sea swept over the boat as her nose came up to the wind and carried the two sallors overboard. No assistance could be given to them, as to leave the wheel at this time meant the loss of the boat and the sacrifice of their own lives.

Observer Smith is inclined to think, from the great area of the storm, that it may last for two days.

This, however, would premise fair weather for Weinesday, as a big rainstorm of the nature of the one expected is nearly always followed by an area of high pressure which clears everything up for a few days.

If the general conditions follow in their usual order, glorious weather and westerly to northwesterly winds may be considered to the streat area.

At Least He So States in a Letter from Newport,

It is stated on good authority that James J. Van Alen has written a letter from his Newport villa, declaring that he will not accept the appointment of Ambassador to Italy, and also that he has asked the President to withdraw his name.

The letter was addressed to the manager of a press-clipping bureau, to which Mr. Van Alen became a subscriber after his appointnent. The statement that he has written to the President declining the place was added by Mr. Van Alen to a letter ancelling his order for clippings. In order, evidently to convince the manager of the agency that he did not countermand his order from'any merce nary motive, Mr. Van Alen states that he has written the President declining the nomination, and asking that his name be withdrawn from the Senate. The press-clipping bureau with which Mr. Van Alen has been in correspond-ence conducts the business of collecting newspaper extracts, which are for warded to subscripers. After Mr. Van Alen's appointment he gave an order for all clipping bearing on his appointment. He did not specify that only favorable references were to be collected for him. onsequently, he has been receiving daily enough extracts to paper the walls of his Newport villa with, matter declaring his unfitnes; for the place of Ambassador to Italy.

Mr. Van Alen's curiosity has evidently been satisfied. In his letter counter manding the order for clippings, he displays considerable bitterness, and extends a purely business letter into one of a personal nature.

The added information is to the effect that he is tired of criticism, would sooner live in blissful ignorance of what s said about him than know that he is a target for the ridicule of newspaper writers, and has therefore determined to do without any more clippings.

Among politicians opinion was divided this morning as to whether Mr. Van Alen was deliberately withdrawing be-cause of adverse criticism, or that his statement to the Press-Clipping Agency was given as an excuse for countermanding the order for clippings.
